

Developer in air war over theme park

The company developing Aboriginal land under the Darwin flight-path is paying aviation consultants in an attempt to defeat official opposition to the project.

Vysrose Pty Ltd director David Smith hired Airplan, which has worked for the RAAF and the Federal Airports Corporation in the past, to ensure the development did not interfere with the flight path.

Mr Smith wants to build a multi-million tourism and leisure park on vacant Aboriginal land he has secured a 99-year lease for, bounded by Bagot Road, Fitzner Drive, Totem Road and Dick Ward Drive.

Landed

The planned development is 1 km from the touchdown point on the runway where 80 000 aircraft, including fighter planes, jets and light planes, have taken off or landed in the past 18 months.

A MacDonalds restaurant at the corner of Fitzner Drive and Bagot Road — where Mr Smith also plans to build shops — was approved last week.

The RAAF and FAC, which manages Darwin Airport, issued public warnings last week the development might cause or worsen an air disaster.

Industries and Development Minister Steve Hatton said last week the NT Government's policy since self-government to 'maintain the integrity of that land for flight paths ... had been clearly explained to the developers'.

Mr Smith said: "We are prepared to compromise."

"The RAAF flies planes all over Darwin and they could drop a bomb anywhere."

An application to rezone the area from R6 to Su for the development to go ahead will go before the NT Planning Authority early next year.

Under the existing zoning the Gwalwa Daraniki Association, which holds title to the land under a Commonwealth lease, can build a flora and fauna sanctuary, cluster dwellings, a child care centre and sports venues.

In a letter to Mr Hatton, association president Helen Secretary said: "... it is rather evident that the uses of the land under the proposed rezoning will be far more suited to the site than the current uses permitted for development."

The approval of MacDonalds should set a precedent for the development of the Kululuk land, she said.

promotional signs, a research centre and a veterinary clinic could be built under the current zoning with planning authority consent.

The same consent would be necessary under the proposed rezoning to build a light industrial area, a licensed club, service industry areas, showroom sales areas and a warehouse.

National standards for airport noise affected areas meant the area was too noisy for the development it was zoned for, Mr Smith said.

But hotels, public buildings, light industry and commercial buildings could be built in the area if the buildings were designed to sufficiently reduce noise.

Lighting would also be carefully designed and could be covered so it did not confuse pilots coming in to land, Mr Smith said.

It is on public record in transcripts of a murder case and in newspaper reports that while Helen Secretary was President of the Kululuk leaseholders (the Gwalwa Daraniki Association) from August 1991 to August 1995 her non-Aboriginal drug-addicted spouse would 'come to the [Kululuk] office and advise [the President] about things.' If she disagreed with him, the President said, 'when I went home I used to get a flogging.' Not long after this deal was signed with Vysrose (now Citiland), on November 22nd, 1994, the GDA President shot her partner in the back while he was asleep because she she said she was afraid of his violent threats (NT News May 12, 1998, p.3, 'Abuse made her shoot husband'). The point is, the GDA constitution could allow criminal elements to run the Association which makes decisions about the future of Aboriginal land. And with a vote of 'a minimum of five' members (of which a majority must be Aboriginal, and including their spouses), it is conceivable that criminal gangs could take over the lease and further change a constitution designed for a darts club, not a body holding 301 hectares of land in the City of Darwin.
